18 October 2015

Twenty-Ninth Sunday in Ordinary Time

James and John float the notion of a promotion to Jesus in our gospel. What happens? Jesus gives their expectations a good shake. It's a pattern we should recognize:

- Peter stuns the other apostles with his insight: "Lord, you are the Messiah!" Moments later he's put in his place: "Get behind me, Satan, you are thinking in human terms, not God's."
- The apostles marvel at the beauty of the Temple, Jesus bluntly informs them that, in time, "not one stone will be left atop another."

"Can you drink of the cup of suffering?" Jesus asks James and John. Do those words make you wince? They make me wince. Why? Because sometimes the truth hurts! As much as we dislike the notion, Jesus' words are true: genuine discipleship involves sacrifice and suffering. It's inevitable.

- "Unless you pick up your cross and follow me, you cannot be my disciple."
- "The first shall be last, the last shall be first."

Such words contradict our expectations regarding what should happen to us, at least until we put them into the context of love. In the context of love, our sacrifices—at first hard to understand why we must make them—turn into foundations of rock. For, indeed, what is love without the courage and willingness to accept the potential—and inevitable—experience of sacrifice and suffering?

- Parents tending the needs of a sick child.
- Donating scarce time and resources to help those less fortunate.
- Working extra hours at inconvenient times to pay the bills and support your family.
- Confronting authorities about matters of injustice.
- Taking care of elderly or infirmed parents, relatives or neighbors.

Granting forgiveness despite the hurts you've suffered.

Discipleship demands courage. Why? Because love without sacrifice is love without substance.

"Will you drink of this cup?" asks the Lord. What is your response?

Fr. Brad Pelzel
