Whoever Loses His Life...

Look at them, the heroes of Christendom. You won't find many prudent ones among them. Their story is a long succession of martyrdoms and deaths, undergone by a phalanx following their God's example. They are soldiers, displaying their scars and wounds to the world as decorations. And who enlists with them? People of all nations, the scum of the earth, even criminals, but always those who have taken the cross. Anyone can join: the ignorant, the sinful, provided he is ready to throw himself into the battle. It is the religion of maximum hope born of despair. Nowhere do you find such close contact with death as in Christianity. Fear is not absent. But it is transformed into a force able to pierce a breach in the tomb and spurt out the other side. Not the contemplation of eternity, in battle, with one sole weapon: the readiness to die. - Andrei Donatovich Sinyavsky

El Que Pierda Su Vida....

Mirarlos, los héroes de la cristiandad. Usted no encontrará muchos prudentes entre ellos. Su historia es una larga sucesión de martirios y muertes, sufrida por una falange siguiendo el ejemplo de su Dios. Son soldados, mostrando sus cicatrices y heridas al mundo como decoraciones. Y que se alista con ellos? Personas de todas las naciones, la escoria de la tierra, incluso los delincuentes, pero siempre los que han tomado la cruz. Cualquier persona puede unirse: el ignorante, el pecado, a condición de que está listo para lanzarse a la batalla. Es la religión de la esperanza máxima nacida de la desesperación. En ninguna parte a encontrar un contacto tan cercano con la muerte como en el cristianismo. El miedo no está ausente. Sin embargo, se transforma en una fuerza capaz de perforar una brecha en la tumba y chorrear por el otro lado. No es la contemplación de la eternidad, en la batalla, con una única arma: la disposición a morir. - Andrei Donatovich Siniavski
