Sixteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Mission change and return of the disciples, a comparison of this episode with Synoptics parallel material makes it likely that both Mark and Matthew were drawing on an earlier account, which included as an unit: the institution of the Twelve and the sending out of the disciples and a discourse of Jesus to the departing missionaries. Mark has separated from and drastically abbreviated. The effect of these relational changes in Mark is to present the mission of the disciples as an account of their preaching than as a preparation for Jesus' self-revelation to them as the Messiah. He called to him the Twelve. Close comparison will show that Mark composed it as a parallel. His separating the institution of the Twelve from the mission charge is a literally artifice that places the latter after Jesus had begun to preach in parables. Matthew may be closer to the fact in placing it before that point in Jesus' ministry, for Jesus apparently did not begin to use parables until after he had experienced a certain disappointment with the crowds. In fact, his use of this method of teaching represented a certain withdrawal from them.

He changed them, this same verb is used in Matthew to introduce the mission discourse, in Mark however, there are only the slightest vestiges of the discourse, and even the instructions Jesus gives show differences. Mark has adapted Jesus instructions by introducing several exceptions that suggest a latter stage of missionary activity, that of the Church outside Palestine. For the same reason Mark omits mention of the prohibition to go among the Gentiles or to any Samaritan town.

Decimosexto Domingo del Tiempo Ordinario

Cambio de misión y retorno de los discípulos, una comparación de este episodio con los sinópticos de material paralelo hace que sea probable que tanto Marcos como Mateo estaban dibujando en una cuenta anterior, que incluyó como una unidad: la institución de los doce y el envío de la discípulos y un discurso de Jesús a los misioneros que se apartan. Marcos se ha separado de y abreviado drásticamente. El efecto de estos cambios relacionales en marcos es presentar la misión de los discípulos como un relato de su predicación que como una preparación para la auto-revelación de Jesús como el Mesías. Él llamó a los doce. La comparación cercana mostrará que Marcos lo compuso como un paralelismo. Su separación de la institución de los doce del cargo de la misión es literalmente un artificio que coloca este último después de que Jesús había empezado a predicar en parábolas. Mateo puede estar más cerca del hecho de colocarlo antes de ese punto en el Ministerio de Jesús, porque Jesús aparentemente no comenzó a usar parábolas hasta después de haber experimentado una cierta decepción con los cuervos. De hecho, su uso de este método de enseñanza representaba una cierta retirada de ellos.

Él los cambió, este mismo verbo se utiliza en Mateo para introducir el discurso misionero, en marcos sin embargo, sólo hay los más leves vestigios del discurso, e incluso las instrucciones que Jesús da muestran diferencias. Marcos ha adaptado las instrucciones de Jesús introduciendo varias excepciones que sugieren una última etapa de la actividad misionera, la de la iglesia fuera de Palestina. Por la misma razón Marcos omite la mención de la prohibición de ir entre los gentiles o a cualquier pueblo Samaritano.
