Twentieth Sunday in Ordinary Time

How to interpret the present? These sayings, originally detached, are loosely joined here. These verses allow us to glimpse into the depths of Jesus' soul as he utters a statement about his mission: to cast fire upon the earth. Fire is usually a figure of judgment; here it seems to be the fire that will separate and purify those who are meant for the kingdom. It will work through Jesus' word and his Spirit, Jesus refers to his coming passion into which he will be plunged. The image is derived from the OT and indicates the depths of sorrow and suffering that await him in his human condition. The Greek word "sinechomai" conveys an anxiety of distress, an intolerable force against restraint. Jesus will not tolerate peace at any cost. His utterance is ironical, He will not bring the sobriety of the status quo, but the sword that will divide the eager from the contented. Even though the Parousia may be delayed, this anxiety was one of the trials of the Church after AD 70, one must keep faith in the presence of the Holy Spirit.

Vigésimo Domingo del Tiempo Ordinario

¿Cómo interpretar el presente? Estas palabras, originalmente separadas, están unidas libremente aquí. Estos versículos nos permiten vislumbrar las profundidades del alma de Jesús mientras pronuncia una declaración sobre su misión: arrojar fuego sobre la tierra. El fuego suele ser una figura de juicio; aquí parece ser el fuego que separará y purificará a los que están destinados al reino. Funcionará a través de la palabra de Jesús y su Espíritu, Jesús se refiere a su próxima pasión en la que se verá inmerso. La imagen se deriva del AT e indica las profundidades del dolor y el sufrimiento que le esperan en su condición humana. La palabra griega "sinechomai" transmite una ansiedad de angustia, una fuerza intolerable contra la restricción. Jesús no tolerará la paz a toda costa. Su expresión es irónica, no traerá la sobriedad del status quo, sino la espada que dividirá a los ansiosos de los contentos. A pesar de que la parusía puede retrasarse, esta ansiedad fue una de las pruebas de la Iglesia después del año 70 DC, uno debe mantener la fe en la presencia del Espíritu Santo.
