Year of Mercy Corner

In many ways, people today almost expect a scam every time some act of kindness is shown them. Many have to struggle and wrestle with a fear that removes a lot of joy from life because the world is not always the safest of places. Taking Our Lord's advice today, how refreshing and welcoming would it be if we were to make a commitment to honesty, for instance. More than rebuilding trust people who consistently practice honesty act as beacons giving people hope and faith in the good God intended humanity to show. By simple and consistent actions, you could very well give hope to others and be the answer to their prayers. Think about it.

Dear family,

It is hard to keep one's heart true and free of corruption. Especially in moments where we feel free from consequences or where risk of danger seems so small, it can be easy to cut corners and put aside virtue for moments of opportunity or convenience. In today's Gospel we hear the story of a man who has become completely corrupt, and though his own corrupt ways hurts his boss, the boss' corruption leads him to admire the steward. Naturally, we don't like either character because they are "bad" people, but they are consistent people, we cannot take away the fact that throughout this story, they are consistent. Jesus mourns the fact that while people entrenched in the ways of the world can be so thoroughly corrupt, it would follow that His people should be thoroughly virtuous souls. Unless we can be completely trustworthy or honest or compassionate then we cease to be authentic people who pick up and abandon values when it is convenient. Jesus always acts and lives in integrity, this is an aspect of holiness and though a struggle, it's worthwhile for us to be whole in His ways and in His love. God bless you and yours.

In His joy,

Rev. Fr. Daniel J. Gutierrez
