Solemnity of the Epiphany of the Lord

JANUARY 8, 2017

Isaiah 60:1-6; Ephesians 3:2-3a,5-6;
Matthew 2:1-12

“Epiphany” means “Manifestation” or “Showing Forth.” Originally, it referred to the official visit of a king or emperor to his provinces. There were parades (during which courtiers threw coins to the onlookers.) There was a banquet for citizens, and a general amnesty.

The word “epiphany” was taken over by the Church for the “showing forth” of the Son of God in-the-flesh. Originally, the feast commemorated three events: the coming of the Magi, the baptism of Jesus, and the wedding feast of Cana. In each case, Jesus manifested his glory.

As time went on, the focus in many (perhaps most) countries was the Magi. These were pagan wise men who probably came from Arabia or Persia. The great irony is that the Chosen people (king and priests and sages at Jerusalem) were indifferent to the birth of Jesus, whereas these pagans traveled long and far!

In our times, the focus of Epiphany is the conversion of the world. Each of the Scripture readings tell of the longing of the Gentiles and nations for light. The first reading speaks of the non-Jewish nations who wish to walk by the light of the Lord.

The Responsorial Psalm proclaims that every nation on earth should adore the Lord. The second reading says that Gentiles (non-Jews) are called to be co-heirs with the Jews in salvation. The Gospel tells of the pagan Magi who come from afar to worship the Lord.

The challenge to us is to spread the message of the truth of Jesus Christ and his Church to the world. It must begin in our neighborhood. Who have you invited to faith last year? Who will you invite this year?

The Church: This week, we continue our study on collegiality. It is important for the structure of the Catholic Church. St. Peter and the other apostles constituted a single apostolic college. In the same way, the Roman Pontiff, Peter's successor, and the bishops, successors of apostles constitute the college in the modern time. Collegiality is a relationship among bishops and between bishops and the Pope. It is not a juridical dependence on the bishop of Rome. It is created by Christ himself and by divine right it belongs to the essential nature of the Church he founded. When a bishop is consecrated, he receives fullness of episcopal power, which is called the high priesthood. The council distinguished three powers inherent in the episcopacy. They are administering the sacraments, including the consecration of other priest as bishops, the office of teaching authoritatively and sharing in the Church's divine guidance of communicating revealed truth, the right to govern and direct the people of God according to norms of worship and conduct that are binding on the consciences of the faithful. Even though he enjoys the power to do these, he needs approval from the bishop of Rome to exercise many of them. It means that this consecration confers only the virtual capacity, not its actual realization. Vat II in its "Dogmatic Constitution III, 21 states, "No doubt, episcopal consecration confers the offices of teaching and ruling. Having these offices, though, is not enough. Of their nature, however, they can only be exercised in hierarchical communion with the head and members of the college. We may conclude with these facts then, 1. The college or body of bishops has no authority unless it is understood together with the Roman Pontiff. Pope decides how much authority the bishops can exercise. 2) In virtue of his office, the Roman Pontiff has full, supreme, and universal power over the Church. And he is always free to exercise this power. A few aspects of the apostolic character are more promising for the future than its collegiality. Father Joe
