At age 3, Ben Hopkins was diagnosed with severe aplastic anemia, a disease that caused his bone marrow to function improperly and compromised his immune system. While waiting for a bone marrow transplant match, blood and platelet transfusions helped keep Ben alive. Today, two years after his bone marrow transplant, Ben is doing well. He enjoys sports, is an avid gamer and will soon enter third grade. To give back, Ben's family hosts an annual blood drive in his honor in their community of Mt Laurel, NJ.
