Seventeenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

From the Pastor's Desk

St. John Chrysostom, who lived in the last half of the fourth century, raised an interesting question in connection with the feeding of the multitudes. Why didn't Jesus simply create food out of thin air rather than multiply the food that was there? After all, the bread and fish were pretty simple fare, lowbrow food—not unlike saltines and canned sardines. Could Jesus, who in John's Gospel is depicted as the one through whom all things were made, not have conjured up something more exciting for the gathered multitude? Chrysostom responds to his own question, saying that it was because Jesus wished to use "the creation itself as a groundwork for his marvels" (Homily 42 on the Gospel of John). Rather than create something anew, Jesus takes what is already at hand and transforms it by multiplying it. And in doing this, Jesus is teaching us two things.

First, he is reminding us that creation itself is already miraculous. Jesus works miracles not to convince us that God can, on occasion, do extraordinary things, but to awaken us to the fact that God does an extraordinary thing—holding our world in existence—all the time. The ongoing existence of our world is the greatest of God's mighty acts, and the miracles of Jesus should reinforce this truth and not undercut it.

Second, he is showing us that the way God works in the world is not by discarding the ordinary realities of creation and substituting for them something new and different, but rather by taking what is already at hand and transforming it. As an old adage of Catholic theology puts it, grace perfects and does not destroy nature. Just as Christ uses the simple food provided by a boy to feed the multitude, so too he can use the simple substance of our daily lives to do his work in the world. We might look at ourselves and ask, like Andrew in today's Gospel, "What good is this for so many?" But today's Gospel shows us that it is good enough, if Christ takes it and blesses it.

Lord Jesus, you take our lives into your hands and bless them. May we become spiritual food for others through the power of your Spirit by leading lives of holiness. Amen.

- Do I appreciate the miraculous nature of my daily life and thank God for the gift of my existence? What hinders me from doing so?
- When have I seen God use ordinary events to do something extraordinary?

Shalom! Fr. Pat
