

Tips for Auditions

1. Know something about the show so you know the character's personality. The better you can "become" that character, the more we get to see your acting skills.
2. Practice your songs and know your range (if applicable). You need to be able to act and sing at the same time - once rehearsals start, you will also need to learn choreography!
3. Pick up audition materials. Practice the lines. Memorize them if you can (this is impressive and lets the director's see your actual acting ability versus your ability to read from a paper!). Practice in front of your parents (even though you may not want to) because they can maybe give you tips on how to improve your performance. Also see: How to Memorize Lines Fast by Backstage Experts.
4. Have your audition sheet filled out and be ready to read the part(s) you're auditioning for. You may be asked to read parts you're not auditioning for.
5. Be prepared to not get the part you want. The directors may think you're perfect for another part, and we want to consider everyone for all parts. (Please see "Philosophy of Casting").

Those who received lead and major parts will be called to talk about expectations for you. Rehearsals begin as soon as you pick up the script!
