The Thirty-First Sunday in Ordinary Time

Growing as Disciples of Jesus, Making Disciples For Jesus

St. Charles Borromeo November 4th

Charles Borromeo was a highly gifted and rather serious young man. By the time he was twenty-one, he had doctorates in civil and canon law. Within a year he was called to Rome by his uncle, Pope Pius IV, and made a cardinal and administrator of Milan, Italy. The list of his duties at that time is long. As secretary of state of the Vatican, Charles was in charge of all the papal states. He also worked closely with the pope at the Council of Trent, when many topics led to heated arguments. Several times it seemed as if the council would break up and everyone would return home. Charles, working behind the scenes helped keep people together.

When Charles was twenty-five his older brother died. Usually this meant that the next boy in the family would be the head. Charles decided to be a priest instead. Shortly after he was ordained, he was made the bishop of Milan. Although the pope wanted him to remain in Rome, Charles felt the need to be with his people in Milan. There his talents and holiness became clear, for, more than anyone else at the time, he tried to make the decrees and changes of the council alive in his diocese.

He traveled through his diocese constantly. He set up orphanages, hospitals, homes for neglected women, seminaries, and colleges. He tried to reform the lives of priests and religious. He started a group of priests called the Oblates of St. Ambrose (now the Oblates of St. Charles) to help him. Once Charles tried to reform a religious order that became so angry that they hired an assassin to kill him. An attempt was made on his life as he prayed, but he was not killed.

In 1567 a plague broke out in Milan and with it came famine. So many people were ill and dying that even the city officials fled the area, but not Charles. He stayed with the sick and cared for them. He ate very little and slept only a few hours a night on boards. During the plague, he sold all he had and even borrowed large sums of money so that he could feed the 60,000 to 70,000 people who came to him for help.

When he was forty-six years old, Charles died, worn out from caring for others and bearing the burdens of his position. Although Charles asked much of the priests and religious he worked with, he never asked them to do anything he himself was not willing to do.

St. Charles is the patron of catechists, catechumens and seminarians.

St. Charles, pray that we might do many good works!

MARRIAGE MINUTE- Many faithful parents will lament the loss of extended prayer time because of a chaotic family schedule. Thinking about the devotional practices they were able to maintain as a single, some even go so far as to doubt that they landed in the right vocation. If you have ever had these thoughts, take heart! This weekend, Jesus reminds us that love of neighbor is worth more to him than sacrifice. For us as married people, this may mean: • Getting up with your baby replaces your midnight Adoration hour • Helping your spouse get kids dressed for school replaces daily Mass • A night home with your spouse replaces a volunteer position at Church We become holy through our sacrament of matrimony, not in spite of it! Reflecting On Sunday's Readings

Robert Munger wrote a helpful little booklet called My Heart, Christ's Home. In it he compares our lives to a house with many rooms. He raises the question, does Christ have access to every room (every area) in our life or only to those areas where we feel comfortable having him visit? Though written over thirty years ago Munger hit upon a phenomenon of contemporary society, the compartmentalizing of the various aspects of our lives. This tendency is also very present within the Christian segment of society and is often expressed by the position that "it isn't what I do that is important but what I believe." Jesus, in this week's Gospel reading, does not accept this dichotomy. When Jesus was asked what is the greatest commandment, he replies, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength." Interestingly, Jesus characterizes our lives as having four segments, heart, soul, mind, and strength. Frequently, though, we do not love God comprehensively in this way but rather amplify our love for God in one of these four segments to the detriment of the others. And so we find some that love devotedly but are weak on understanding, or others who have great knowledge about God, but lack deep love. Still there are some who express their love very emotionally while failing to attend to people's physical needs, and still others who go about doing all kinds of good but who have little interest in increasing their understanding. It seems like we all want to love God on our terms and in the way we choose. Jesus teaches that this partial response is not sufficient. He repeatedly uses the word "all" to communicate that our love for God should encompass all parts of our being; all our affections, all our emotions, all our understanding, and all our actions. Then Jesus goes one step further and says that we should also love our neighbor, his creation, as ourselves. This type of love is an all-consuming love, beyond our capabilities, and requires the giving of all that we are to him. Munger challenges us in his booklet that instead of allowing Jesus to simply be a guest in our home (life) we should turn ownership over to him, giving Jesus both the deed and the key to our home (life). This abandonment of ourselves in love to Jesus is both the beginning act of loving God with all our heart, all our soul, all our mind, and all our strength, and the means by which we will be able to love our neighbor as ourselves. The ability to love God with our all, inasmuch as it is beyond our natural abilities, requires yielding to the Holy Spirit, for the first fruit of the Spirit is love. It is the Holy Spirit who opens our mind and heart to increasingly understand the depth of the Father's love, and the extent to which it was expressed in Christ's incarnation and passion. For in the final analysis our ability to love God with our all is a reciprocal action that mirrors and reflects the extent to which we have grasped God's love. It is that love which compels us to stop living for ourselves and to begin living for Christ. St. Theresa understood well the compelling nature of love to change our behavior. "Perhaps we do not know what love is: it would not surprise me a great deal to learn this, for love consists, not in the extent of our happiness, but in the firmness of our determination to try to please God in everything, and to endeavor, in all possible ways, not to offend Him, and to pray Him ever to advance the honour and glory of His Son and the growth of the Catholic Church. Those are the signs of love..."¹ Without this compelling love, inviting Jesus to no longer simply be a guest in our lives but instead to live and rule there as the rightful owner, is very difficult. So let's begin asking the Holy Spirit to show us the Father's love and to reproduce it in our hearts. We then will say with the Psalmist, "I love thee, O LORD, my strength."
