

Jason Evert-The Chastity Project by Liam Hatgas published on November 18, 2018

On October, 3, 2018 our junior high, with a group of other elementary schools, attended a talk by Jason Evert at Holy Name High School. Jason Evert gave a very powerful talk about chastity. Chastity is staying pure and saving yourself for your spouse. Jason Evert works with the organization The Chastity Project, which is an organization he started. Their mission is to promote chastity, primarily to high school and college students.

I had the pleasure with meeting with Michael, an 8th grader, who was able to attend Jason Evert's talk about chastity. Michael said, "The talk was good. The part from the talk that stuck with me was how Jason Evert was able to tell him stories about people who were not chaste and those people are the people who were not happy. It reminded me that those who live a chaste life live a happy and joyful life." Michael said the part he liked best about the speaker and presentation was "How the speaker was a primary source, about witnessing people who did not live a chaste life." He also liked that even though people might have messed up they were able to turn their life around, and become chaste. Michael added that "To me, the overall message was that you have to know the difference between lust and love and when you figure out that difference that will lead to wise decision making and a chaste life."

I asked if Michael would recommended Jason Evert's project to others. Michael said, "Yeah, because in this generation, kids are often exposed to bad things that can affect their purity, dignity as a human being, and chastity. By listening to these talks young teens can prepare themselves by not getting into situations that can harm them". As Jason Evert said, "Only falsehood wraps itself in a flood of words. Truth is brief. By coming to these talks we can separate the truth and the lies". Great points, Michael! Special thanks to Holy Name High School for hosting this event, and Mrs. Updegrove for making the arrangements for our junior high students to attend.
