

Annual Report from the Child Protection Advisory Board July 1, 2017-June 30, 2018

The Archdiocese of Washington's Office of Child and Youth Protection continues to create and implement initiatives and programs to help educate all members of the community on child protection efforts. In summary:

- The Archdiocese of Washington has had a written Child Protection Policy for more than 30 years.
- The Archdiocese of Washington's child protection office continues to conduct thorough background checks on individuals who have substantial contact with children.
- The Archdiocese continues to lead the way in child protection by being one of the first dioceses to implement a written policy, regularly provide education on child safety and require fingerprinting and electronic criminal background checks of employees.
- Today, crucial and relevant information regarding the Child Protection Policy, as well as best practices, is available online at www.adw.org.

Crucial to what is a model for other child protection programs around the country is our Archdiocese of Washington Child Protection Advisory Board of lay experts (including at least one victim-survivor), which monitors the Archdiocese's outreach and compliance with the Child Protection Policy. This highly engaged board consults with the Office of Child Protection on a regular basis, offering expertise and recommendations. In addition, the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops audits the Archdiocese of Washington on its compliance with the U.S. Bishops' Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People. The auditors, from a third-party independent organization, conduct interviews with Archdiocesan staff and review records relating to education, background checks, compliance monitoring, reporting and healing. The Archdiocese has been found in full compliance with the audit every year, including this reporting year of 2017-2018.

One of the most vital parts of the Child Protection Policy is accountability. Each year, the Archdiocesan Executive Director of the Office of Child and Youth Protection compiles a report for the Vicar General of the Archdiocese to present to the Child Protection Advisory Board. The Child Protection Advisory Board reviews the annual report, recommends modifications if required, then approves and makes public the annual report, which is widely shared with the media and online.

EDUCATION

The Archdiocese of Washington embraces its opportunity to teach those in its communities that all children deserve to be safe and protected in all environments – home, school, religious institutions, and communities. The Archdiocesan Child Protection Policy mandates child-abuse awareness and prevention education to all adults who have substantial contact with children or vulnerable adults, as well as age-appropriate safe-environment education for all youth. It is essential that all adults are well-trained so they are equipped to identify signs and symptoms of possible abuse. Additionally, adults working with children are trained on appropriate boundaries when working with children.

Adult Education. The program used by the Archdiocese of Washington, Protecting God's Children, is nationally recognized and was developed by National Catholic Risk Retention Group/Virtus. Twenty-two (22) Virtus-trained facilitators, including several who are bilingual in English and Spanish, led this year's education sessions. Between July 1, 2017 and June 30, 2018:

- 76 Protecting God's Children training sessions, including seven (7) sessions in Spanish, were held at various locations throughout the archdiocese.
- 3,385 individuals, including volunteers, new employees, religious, seminarians, and clergy were trained.

Child Education. The Archdiocese, under the direction of the Superintendent of Schools and the Director of Catechesis, continued to provide safe-environment education for the children in archdiocesan Catholic schools and parish religious education programs. The Catholic Schools Office and the Office of Catechesis used materials developed by Virtus, the same company that provides the adult education materials. For the 2017-18 school year:

- 14,678 Catholic school students and 23,569 children in parish religious education programs received safe environment education.

FINGERPRINTING AND BACKGROUND CHECKS

The Archdiocese recognizes that background checks are a crucial element in ensuring the safety of children and helping to protect them from the inappropriate actions or behaviors of others. All clergy, religious, seminarians, employees and volunteers who will have substantial contact with minors while working or volunteering are required to undergo state and federal criminal history record checks before they begin working or volunteering with minors.

Since 2002, fingerprinting has been done through state-of-the art scanning using Live Scan equipment at two Archdiocesan locations. All fingerprints are sent to the State and Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) for review and alerts are sent to the Archdiocese of Washington:

- 1,241 employees, religious, seminarians and clergy were fingerprinted.
- 3,935 electronic background checks were conducted on clergy, religious, employees, seminarians, and volunteers including: federal, state, district federal, and county record checks.
- Re-checks were performed on a monthly basis.

Currently, all volunteers must complete an electronic background check and employees, educators, religious, seminarians, and clergy must complete both fingerprinting and an electronic background check.

CHILD-ABUSE ALLEGATIONS

The Archdiocese of Washington is committed to working with law enforcement and civil authorities to protect children by preventing child abuse and neglect, reporting alleged incidents of abuse or neglect, cooperating in investigations of allegations, as well as advising victims of their right to report independently and supporting their exercise of that right. Archdiocesan policy requires all Archdiocesan personnel to report any suspected abuse to civil authorities. Reporting requirements, both civil and internal, are described in the Archdiocese of Washington's Child Protection Policy, which is available as a handbook and online at www.adw.org.

The Office of Child and Youth Protection continues to assist the community in these reporting obligations, as well as to offer guidance on navigating the reporting process. Staff can be contacted by telephone, email or fax, 24 hours a day, to receive allegations of current or past suspected abuse, and to report such allegations to civil authorities. Between July 1, 2017 and June 30, 2018:

- Allegations against Archdiocesan clergy in this reporting period.
There were no allegations of abuse made against any archdiocesan clergy this year.
- Allegations against lay employees, contract workers and others in this reporting period.
There were no allegations of sexual abuse made against any lay employees, contract workers or vendors during this year.

* Reports of past historical allegations of abuse that were reported after the close of this annual report (June 30, 2018) will be included in the 2018-2019 annual report.

Finally, in June 2018 the Archdiocese of New York reported that a credible allegation of child sexual abuse was made against Theodore McCarrick when he served as a priest in the Archdiocese of New York. After the allegation was reported, the Archdiocese of Washington's legal department reviewed its files and found no allegations of child abuse filed against the former archbishop while he served in Washington.

FINANCIAL RESOURCES FOR CHILD-PROTECTION EFFORTS

Between July 1, 2017 and June 30, 2018, $289,418.00 was spent on implementing and complying with the Child Protection Policy. This included salaries and benefits for the Office of Child and Youth Protection and the Office of Employee and Volunteer Services, materials, training stipends, fingerprinting and other equipment purchases and maintenance, and professional fees for the training program. An additional $53,274.87 was spent on counseling and other assistance for victims.

To ensure that all clergy, religious, seminarians, employees, and volunteers who have substantial contact with children are compliant with Archdiocesan child protection requirements, the Archdiocese requires each parish and school designate a child protection compliance coordinator. The coordinator maintains compliance records for the parish/school location so only those who are fully compliant may work or volunteer with children. Coordinators have immediate online access to compliance information for their location.

COMMUNICATIONS

The Archdiocese of Washington's web site contains information about the Archdiocesan policies and procedures outlined in the Child Protection Policy. Child Protection information continues to be available through the Archdiocesan newspapers, church bulletins, priest/parish/school newsletters, as well as on parish websites. The Office of Child Protection's online supplemental training series "Focus on the Child" continues to be a valuable training resource for community members. This seven-series safe environment training resource provides fundamental information necessary to educate and empower the broader community regardless of religious affiliation about identifying signs and symptoms of child abuse and how to report suspected abuse to civil authorities.

On the Archdiocesan website under the Child Protection tab, several resources are available, including parent resources about the Archdiocesan Child Protection Policy, safety tips for parents, as well as information about internet safety, cyber bullying, sexting, a "kid's guide" to bullying, and healthy teen relationships. The Archdiocesan website also includes other important resources to help protect children and provide guidance on creating and maintaining safe environments.

CONCLUSION AND DIRECTION FOR THE FUTURE

The Office of Child and Youth Protection has been renamed the Office of Child Protection and Safe Environment. The mission of the office continues to focus on educating the community on the practices and protocols of Archdiocese of Washington's Child Protection Policy and working with parishes and schools to implement the strict application of the policy. In order to better serve the Archdiocese of Washington's community, the structure of the office was expanded to include the intake of allegations of adult misconduct or assault of those in Archdiocesan ministry including Bishops. The Office of Child Protection and Safe Environment's top priority is the safety and well-being of all members of the Archdiocese of Washington.

NATIONAL AUDIT

As stated previously, for this reporting period of 2017-2018, the Archdiocese of Washington was once again found in compliance with the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People, enacted by the U.S. bishops in 2002. The Archdiocese has been found in compliance every year since the audits were initiated.
